Bird Song

The gift of bird song is largely a mascu-

The gift of bird song is largely a masculine prerogative, an expression of tender sentiment by which the affection of the opposite sex may be attracted and retained. Indeed the birds furnish no exception to the sweeping assertion that "'tis love that gives the key to all earth's music." They sing from love and happiness, says one; from love and rivalry, another asserts, while joy and buoyaney of spirits are said by a third authority to be answerable for their music. That most of the species sing best in the spring is well known, the motive that is responsible for the generous outpour of song being a result of its influences; they are happy to be at home again

Undoubtedly they sing at times for very joy, just as we go singing about our work because our hearts are light and happy, and the song sings itself; we have only to listen to it.—Neily Hart Woodworth in Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly.

The Famous Race Course of Paris.

Longchamps is a charming spot. The surrounding landscape seen from the grand stand with the Boulogne wood and the green and picturesque slopes of Bellevne, made the paddock and field of Longchamps a most elegant rendezvous. The Mount Valerian and the Roman hill and the undulus zigzags of the Biver Saire.

lerian and the Roman hill and the undu-lous zigzags of the River Seine complete a marvelous picture. On payment of a four dollar admission fee anybody can roam about in what formerly might have been termed "sacred precincts." Workmen in their Sunday garments, employees from the banks and the Bourse, women of all classes and categories, touts and school-boys, all risk their weekly earnings, and sometimes more.

These are the initial letters to a medical wonder. As human nature is heir to ills of every kind, and as nearly every disease enters and is diffused through the system by the blood, it is evident that if the blood is in an unhealthy condition it imparts to the body its impure state, and disease and death follows. There is a cure for impure blood, and therefore a cure for all diseases arising from it. That cure is Dr. David's Iodo-Forrated Sursaparilla. "Many people regard newspapers as property of other people a good deal as they look upon umbrellas," said a woman recently. "That they should be looked after and returned to their owners does not seem cently. "That they should be looked after and returned to their owners does not seem to be necessary or even permissible. One summer at a boarding house in the mountains I received by mail from a friend a foreign newspaper, with the request that I return it when read. Before doing so I handed it to a fellow boarder—a man—as something of general interest. He did not return it, and after some hesitation the day before I left I asked for it. 'Oh,' he replied carelessly, 'did you expect me to return the paper? I suppose it has been thrown away. I can look for it, but I don't suppose it has been kept.'

"We were standing near the door of his room at the moment, but he did not offer to look for it there, and I was obliged to content myself with the request that he would do so at his convenience. He never alluded to the matter again, however, and I left the next day. I apologized to my friend, and sent abroad for another paper, which came in due time. It was careless of me perhaps not to have requested the return of the paper at the time I offered which came in due time. It was careless of me perhaps not to have requested the return of the paper at the time I offered it; still, a foreign paper with a marked article, I think, carried on its face a recognizable value which, if disregarded, de-manded an apology for the neglect."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

The Shorter Novel.

The Shorter Novel.

The Century acknowledges a form of literary art not hitherto recognized by our great monthlies, by printing a tiny sketch, "etching," "pastel"—whatever one may choose to call it—by Miss Mary E. Wilkins. This departure has moved a number of crities to point out that when the novel dwindles from the three volumes of the past generation to three stickfuls—to revert to the vocabulary of the composing room—its end must be near. On the contrary, it is a sign that fiction in this country is taking a new lease of life; that we have boldly cut loose from English tradihave boldly cut loose from English tradi-tions, and are going to adopt continental ones, or, better still, get on without any traditions at all.

ones, or, better strin, get on without any traditions at all.

The conte, a brief sketch of a single incident or impression, has long held an honorable place in French letters. It corresponds in some respects to the studies a master makes for a great picture. It has opportunities for a perfection of detail impossible in an extended story where one incident must serve another, and the writing and reading of such careful liter ary studies will develop in our fiction a technique which it has hitherto sorely lacked.—Kate Field's Washington.

Far be it from me to discourage true economy; it is only the base imitation which is to be avoided. Buying socks at twenty-five cents a pair and throwing them away instead of having them washed or mended passes for economy among a certain set of impecunious young men. It is needless to comment upon the folly of this kind of saving; yet it corresponds to many other similar acts known as economy to the unthrifty.—Chicago Post. omy to the unthrifty.-Chicago Post.

But now how great the change! Longchamps has lost its aristocratic bearing. Society still continues going to the races, the crowd follows. The sight in the paddock on any important race day, be it during the spring, summer or autumn meeting, is nevertheless worth seeing.

There are the representatives of society and the most elegant of women in the most expensive and extravagant of costumes.
